

What good is Internet-based technology?

June 15, 2002

Page 4

Isn't it convenient to be able to check your e-mail from home? It is until you try to answer your e-mail from the office and determine that the messages you want to answer are stored on your home computer. Web-based e-mail eliminates these problems. All your contact information and messages, both sent or received, are stored on the ASP's central server, available at anytime from anywhere. E-mails opened or sent from home are readily available from the office, allowing e-mail to work as it should work.

How about those accounting charges? Many lawyers using piecemeal, non-integrated PC oriented accounting packages never have time to accutegrs .pation Tc-0.0026 Tw(w(e5.497 valid gopentraledgevebalanceemsOfte

